Agenda

- Differences between secondary sources
- Sources for refereed journal articles
- Sources for refereed working papers
- Overview

Differences between secondary sources

- Refereed journal articles:
 - Written by researcher
 - Large amount of time spend on each article
 - Referees / Editors decide whether article will be published
 - High quality
 - High turn-down-rates
- Working paper:
 - Written by researcher
 - Medium to large amount of time spend on paper
 - Often first draft of studies published on the internet to get feedback from the research community
 - Later, these working papers are submitted to be reviewed by referees of refereed journals
- Magazine articles:
 - Written by journalists
 - Small to medium amount of time spend on each article
- Newspaper articles:
 - Written by journalists
 - Small amount of time spend on each article

Sources for refereed journal articles

- Find electronic versions of the journals on the web pages of munich libraries:
 - <http://www.ub.tum.de> : TUM's library homepage
 - <http://www.bsb-muenchen.de> : Bayerische Staatsbibliothek's home page
- Search for the title of the journal in “Elektronische Medien” / “Electronic Media” (TUM) or “Elektronische Zeitschriften” / “Electronic Journals” (BSB)
- Regard difference between older / current volumes
- Search for the title of the article / authors within the journal
- See example: Adler, M. and B. Dumas (1983), International portfolio choice and corporation finance: A synthesis, The Journal of Finance, 38, 925-984.
